Hi [FIRST NAME],

With customer experience metrics now determining 57% of overall Star ratings, member engagement has never been more important for retention.

When members feel that their health plans care about their health and well-being, they're loyal consumers.

And while there are many strategies to drive member engagement, they all come down to one simple idea: communication.

That's according to our recent survey, "Understanding the Health Insurance Member Experience," which revealed more than 70% of members say they're very loyal to their health plans when they receive regular correspondence.

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Today’s consumers are all about quick and convenient: apps, email, SMS, and chat.

Yet when it comes to the healthcare member experience, surprisingly, a majority prefer an old-fashioned phone call.

According to our recent survey, “Understanding the Health Insurance Member Experience,” more than 56% of members prefer live voice over chat to resolve their issues in real-time.

And while they may prefer live support, that doesn’t necessarily mean they’re satisfied with the experience.

Among the reasons they cited for a poor experience?

Long wait times.
Lack of understanding.
Poor continuity.
Language barriers.

Hi [FIRST NAME],

With an estimated 68 million people in the U.S. who have limited English proficiency (LEP), providing language access and ensuring compliance are top priorities for health plans like yours.

Unfortunately, language access is one area that continues to be a challenge.

According to our recent survey, “Understanding the Health Insurance Member Experience,” more than 1/3 of health plan members say their experience with telephone support is unfavorable because of language barriers.

These findings highlight the need for health plans to not only provide multi-language support but also to continually measure metrics that lead to improvements and ensure performance.

Body copy:

Hi [FIRST NAME],

Oftentimes, the first touchpoint a member has with their health plan is a customer service call.

They need help understanding their benefits and services and have questions about what's covered.

Above all, they want a quick resolution.

Also important: feeling that they have a trusted, compassionate relationship with their health plans.

Yet without these pieces in place, retention rates can suffer.

In our recent survey, “Understanding the Health Insurance Member Experience,” we explored what members really want from health plans and discovered nearly 90% say phone representatives who are knowledgeable and well-versed in healthcare is critical.

Subject line C: Why your call center is stretched thin [Survey]

30% of members lack benefit awareness which could be putting an undue burden on your resources.

Body copy:

Hi [FIRST NAME],

If your customer call center agents are spending more time explaining benefits to members rather than resolving their issues, a lack of awareness, education, and high-touch member engagement could be to blame.

Findings from our recent survey, “Understanding the Health Insurance Member Experience,” reveal that more than one-quarter (28%) of members say their level of understanding of all the benefits their health plan offers is either fair or poor.

Fortunately, addressing the lack of awareness isn’t as challenging as you think.
